National Survey Highlights Importance of Community Events for Veteran Reintegration and Overall Well-Being

May 9th, Vet Tix released the results of its annual survey. As a valued Vet Tix partner, this info maybe of interest as to its impact on vets and the military community that you support.

With over 44,000 respondents, the survey captures the value veterans and service members find in engaging in their communities as identifies challenges they face in their lives. This year's survey findings reveal key insight on the military transition and reintegration process, the impact of community events on positive mental health, and more.

This year's survey findings reveal that:

Providing free access to a wide range of community events:
Has a positive impact on the military transition and reintegration process
Contributes to positive mental health and family bonding
Increases community engagement
Access to Vet Tix's support enabled nearly 60 percent of respondents to attend a new type of event.

70 percent of respondents feel that non-veterans can't relate to military service and their struggles.

Attending events through Vet Tix significantly improves respondents' perception of their community's support for veterans, with more than 90 percent agreeing, after attending events through Vet Tix, that their community supports veterans.

35 percent of respondents reported feeling isolated from personal relationships after serving in the military. That's why it's great news that over 95 percent said that attending events with significant others improved their relationships.
